

How to choose the right HR support for your practice

Choosing the right HR support is one of the most important decisions you can make for your practice.

Get it right and you'll have happier people, fewer problems, stronger performance and more time to focus on growth. Get it wrong and you could face costly mistakes, legal risks and culture issues that affect your bottom line.

This guide is here to help you to make the right choice.

Whether you're hiring your first employee, growing your team or dealing with complex people challenges, it's vital to understand what kind of HR support you need and how to get it.

1. The different HR roles and how they support your practice at every level

HR isn't just about policies and paperwork. It operates on three levels, each offering different values to your practice.

Operational HR

This is the foundation. It's the day-to-day work that keeps you legally compliant and your practice running smoothly.

Examples:

- Contracts, handbooks and policies
- Absence and holiday management
- Disciplinary and grievance procedures
- Health and safety basics

Middle: Tactical HR

This level helps you to manage and improve your people practices.

Examples:

- Recruitment and onboarding
- Employee relations
- Performance management
- Training and development
- Supporting line managers

Top: Strategic HR

This is where HR becomes a growth driver. It links people strategy directly to practice outcomes.

Examples:

- Organisational design and workforce planning
- Leadership development and succession planning
- Culture and engagement strategies
- Change management and transformation
- Employer brand and retention

As a practice, you need to decide what HR support you need. Many practices only focus on the bottom layer and miss out on the value HR can really bring.

That's why we advise getting HR support that can help you with all 3.

2. The different ways to get HR support (and what they cost)

Here are your main options:

Option 1: Train an existing team member

- ✓ Lowest upfront cost
- ✗ Lacks experience, may miss risks or make mistakes
- ✗ Not suitable for anything beyond basic admin
- 📅 Still requires investment in training

Option 2: Hire an internal HR manager

- ✓ Dedicated support on-site
- ✗ High salary, recruitment costs and benefits
- ✗ May not be cost-effective for some practices
- 📅 Average HR Manager salary: £45,000–£60,000+

Option 3: Use a large HR provider

- ✓ Fixed-fee packages, 24/7 support
- ✗ Call-centre style advice, little personalisation
- ✗ Not strategic or proactive and very risk adverse
- 📅 Packages from £200/month, but costs increase with complexity

Option 4: Work with an independent HR consultant

- ✓ Personalised support from someone who knows your practice
- ✓ Flexible and cost-effective
- ✓ Strategic input and hands-on delivery
- 📅 Typical 2025–2026 rates:

HR Support

Hourly: £65 - £85

Daily: £480 - £645

In house training workshops:

Whole day: £875

Half Day: £675

Why choose an independent HR consultant:

An independent HR consultant gives you the best of both worlds - expert support when you need it, without the overheads of hiring in-house or the impersonal service of a large provider.

Here's what sets us apart:

1. Personal service

You'll work with someone who gets to know your practice, your team and your goals – not a stranger in a call centre.

2. Flexibility

Support that grows with you. Whether it's a quick call, a project or long-term partnership, you only pay for what you need.

3. Deep expertise

We bring years of hands-on HR experience across a range of industries. We know what works, what doesn't and how to get results quickly.

4. Strategic insight

We go beyond the basics to help you to build a high-performing team, reduce risk and improve your practice from the inside out.

5. Value for money

You get access to senior-level HR support for a fraction of the cost of hiring in-house – with a focus on solving problems before they escalate.
